A Message from Ms. Boyle

Over the past couple of weeks, students in the fifth grade have been learning more about the process of research, and developing projects to present their learning of early European explorers. Over this time, students have discussed organization of information, ways to present information (both digitally and paper based), using the internet to successfully research a topic, providing and applying peer feedback and more. Students had the option to create one of three final products to share their learning of an explorer of their choice: a baseball card, a digital or paper based wanted poster, or to create an interview using iMovie on the iPad. This morning, students had the opportunity to explore their classmates work and learn about explorers other than their own during a museum walk.

Mr. John Frost visited our sixth graders on Friday, May 25 to discuss eclipses. Mr. Frost travels the world to view solar eclipses. The knowledge he has gained through numerous experiences allowed him to enrich the sixth graders understanding of eclipses and teach them about what to expect and how to prepare if given the chance to observe an eclipse of their own. Thank you, Mr. Frost!

This week in Ancient Civilizations we made computer advertisements through Google Drawings for the Roman Army! This involved explaining the training of Roman soldiers, the benefits of being soldier such as being part of a triumph or holding the Roman standard, and preparing Romans for battle against Carthage in the Punic Wars!

We also had a visit from Julius Caesar himself!

In World History I, the class continued its discussion and analysis of the history of Japan regarding the Tokugawa Shogunate and its policies. We also explored activities that people throughout certain era's in Japanese history may have enjoyed, such as writing Kanji, creating origami, playing with a (Mr. G homemade set) new deck of Menko cards, among others! The students explored various stations around the room and engaged in different historical Japanese activities!
